Oriental Fiber Is Being Tried Out In Everglades A Re

Much Interest Centers Around Prospects Of Raising Ramie

A new industry is blossoming forth in the Everglades according to a recent issue of The Florida Grower. According to this magazine the Everglades muck is ideal for the growing of Ramie and Florida should become a world capital of the greatest textile advancement since mechanical production of animal and vegetable fibers into cloth. The production of Ramie is paralleled in importance by the discovery of the uses of the muck of the Everglades.

It is estimated that the muck is worth more to grow than to manure. For the first time, industry will be enabled to produce in quantities limited only by time required for agricultural production of raw material, superior fabrics and papers known "ever" thousands of years ago to excel the strength of all other textiles known. Ever since the discovery of cotton, known even to such ancients as Virgil and Marco Polo is the fact that Ramie does not stretch. And its apparent super-perviousness to rot even in mud water is admirable for use for hundreds of years in sails on Chinese vessels that are said to have outlived their makers. Science has determined further that Ramie is twice as resistant to heat as cotton. And while unaffected by oil or grease, it accepts dyes more readily than cotton, even when mixed with animal fiber.

Giving greater significance to the were-proofs that the Florida Everglades are admirably adapted by nature to large-scale economical production of Ramie. Actual production in small experiments were presented to show that advanced methods of modern agriculture can be expected to produce yields not only to replace the loss of oriental Ramie plantings, but also fully adequate to maintain the production of the creation, fickle Nature also provided the means of withholding full realization of the possibilities. Throughout the centuries advanced textile science was buffeted in vain by the forces of nature. The modern scientific method, the more closely to the parent plant, the more the apertures of an anxious mother. Modern engineers fared no better in seeking to replace arduous, tiring, hand labor and non-powered, oriental contraptions. Ramie fiber—more profit than any other—awaits the coming of mechanical decoration of Ramie.

Bean Price Holds As Shipments To Markets Decline

Packing Houses Close For Christmas Holiday In Glades

Most packing houses in the Glades area closed Wednesday and Thursday for the Christmas holidays after a mixed five day period of shipping.

Bountifuls $1.15 to $1.35 and Tendergrons $1.25 to $1.40. The market is expected to decline during the next few weeks. East coast shippers are making a big effort to get beans from the Everglades causing New York market prices to remain moderate. Holiday buying is expected to aid price factors this season.

Other vegetables are starting to roll from the Everglades with potatoes being shipped to northern markets. In the same period shipments of peas totaled 10 cars and 5 trucks. Potato prices were considered good at $1.50 to $1.65 for U. S. 1's. In view of the season and the price of peas were considered fair in the Vanguard. Other machines produce commercially acceptable quantities of Ramie. Final process are yielding the strongest, purest, most beautiful Ramie fiber ever known—with no loss of raw material and no increasing yield of by-products that in themselves will be worth millions of dollars. These machines have been accomplishing satisfactory mass production for an extended period.

Florida's first commercially produced and decorated Ramie fiber was delivered to a leading manufacturer from the finest paper company more than a year ago. Without fanfare an initial contract for 5000 tons of Ramie was completed. Salvation Army officials are also assisting in the distribution. The family will receive a bushel basket check of meats, groceries, fruits and vegetables, included in each basket.

Belk praised the generosity of the donors and the splendid effort of the workers to make sure that no one in Pahokee goes hungry on Christmas.

Mail Delivery Is Asked For Pahokee

It was revealed this week that Pahokee residents may soon enjoy the convenience of carrier delivery of their mail. The Postmaster Edward A. Jensen is expected to make application for carrier service immediately after the first of January. By reason of its population, Pahokee has long been exempted from the postal application could not be entered because of the absence of street markers. A ruling of the Postmaster requires street markers in any community desiring carrier service.

A number of streets of the town in Pahokee during the past few weeks has made approval of Postmaster Jensen. If the application is granted it is expected that two carriers will be employed to deliver mail in Pahokee. Whether the entrance of the United States into war may cause the Postmaster to delay approval of the application could not be determined.
